

Peter Gardonyi

A former teacher, Peter has over 30 years' experience in teaching and learning. When he left teaching, Peter worked with the Government's Health Education Authority leading a team of over 40 people carrying out several high profile projects into health educational excellence, including the world's largest research study into physical fitness. He eventually became head of HR for the authority which enabled him to gain insight into a variety of styles of working, and the unique needs, systems and policies dealing with Organisational Change and Development programmes.

However, his passion has remained understanding how we think, learn and build relationships in the work place. He specialises in developing effective teams, especially at the top of organisations. His real expertise is in getting the best out of individuals and, subsequently, teams, by building worthwhile and meaningful relationships, founded on mutual respect whilst keeping individual dignity in place. He also specialises in 'Using Your Brain in Building Better Relationships'.

Peter specialises in working with senior leadership teams to maximise their effectiveness through workshops, facilitation and coaching and mentoring. He works with Top Teams at the Executive and Board level, looking at Strategic direction and decisions and is highly experienced in one-to-one coaching, where he coaches Senior Executives, both in the Private and in the Public sector; from financial institutions, through to educational executives; from strategic through to operational implementation.

Peter is a highly experienced and advanced level facilitator of groups and teams, and is acknowledged as a Master facilitator by the 'Franklin / Covey Leadership Center', both here and in the United States. He works comfortably with groups from two, to two hundred, depending upon the needs of the group, and specialises in the development of people and teams in terms of their individual and group learning potential.
